"In our deserts the makers of lethal fragrance have labored demanding to supply us with the guns to shield ourselves and damage the Zionists should still they ever assault us, or their allies, may still they, too, dare to assault us." —Saddam Hussein
In the aftermath of the 1990–1991 Gulf War, Deadly Perfume Mossad agent David Morton has carte blanche to prevent terrorist Khalil Raza from freeing a kind of anthrax in a position to wiping out thousands in minutes. A megalomaniac terrorist holds the realm hostage, threatening to poison each significant urban with a dangerous virus. He has the means—a deadly poison—and demonstrates its efficiency through including a small vial of it to the ingesting water in a small South African town, killing the entire inhabitants. With merely seven days to fulfill his demands, the world's leaders name on David Morton, a super and ruthless Mossad agent. The result's a annoying worldwide chase, top from China to Athens, London, Libya, South Africa, Tel Aviv, and New York, drawing stable and evil nearer and nearer in a conflict to the death. Deadly Perfume penetrates the true international of intelligence-gathering to bare its mystery subculture, with its hidden loyalties and agendas. In David Morton, Gordon Thomas has imagined an international so terrifyingly actual that it poses the question, Is it imagined at all?

Good, yet a bit slow; Israelis try to cease Arab terrorists from utilizing Anthrax to kill millions.
